

Civil Culture

The movie reflection of 'The White Ribbon'

Written by Cherry Chen 499810314, 2010/1/4

At the beginning of this movie, the continuous accidents happened surprising everyone, yet none know why they accrued and who did those. Without a truth and lacking any proves, people seem assisting to be partial to the cutthroat. During the middle plot of this movie, it was a bit dull to me. However, there were lots of doubts appeared in my mind, I can't bare myself to question maybe someone is the convict according to the dramatic plots. Later more suspicious points were aiming to whom I never wanted to doubt.

The whole story is a fabrication, but every single event happened at separated locations in German and Austria in 1920 to 1940, before the World War I. Originally, the town in the movie goes pretty peaceful, suddenly the accidents and violence ruined the organize in this small town, the village people started to no longer believe in each other; it's just like a shrunken society that represented the ugly and depress from oppressive side. After all, whether the wars recorded in the history are catastrophes for human beings or the burst out form pent-up human nature become an unreleased mystery.

As my opinion, each kind of terrorism maybe begin from the situation of disappointments, people followed their concepts and started to behave like revenging. However, it's a challenge that dissimilar levels and different quality things are mixed together at times, how to define them becoming a big issue. It not only requires an objective mind but clear analysis of the whole human group.